About Building Associations. In no other city in the country has the building association principle been so fully tested as in Philadelphia, and admittedly its practical working there has been of vast benefit to the city, as well as in the main to the individuals connected with the societies, both borrowers and investors. The building association interest is such a prominent one there that a building association league has been formed, and we see in the Ledger the draft of a bill adopted by the association, to be submitted to the legislature, with petitions from building societies, for its enactment. The proposed act does not give any new powers to the societies or boards of directors, but simply secures to them in specific language powers which some societies now exercise in the belief that they are acting, according to the spirit at least, of existing laws. It, however, affords additional protection to the individual members of societies, and in doing so necessa rily puts some limitations upon the powers of societies and of boards of directors. Thus the borrower who repays a loan, or from whom a loan is recovered by process of law, is secured in that repayment or recovery from the operation of any unjust rule on the subject of premiums retained by the society or returned to: thé borrower. Those who from any cause neglect to pay their dues, are also protected from exorbitant fines, by a provision which limits the fine for unpaid instalments to two per cent. per month as the maximum. In a general way, the building association league asks the legislature to reaffirm, in more explicit language, a grant of powers and privileges which the societies now exercise and enjoy, and also asks the legislature to limit

The Ledger, in treating upon the matter, remarks that it is not often that corporations go before the legislature with a bill asking for self-restraint; requests from corporations are generally for an increase of power and more license in doing business, rather than for limitations, however necessary and desirable they may be. We presume, however, that the Philadelphia societies have come to the same conclusion reached by the Washington building societies: that the general interests of the organizations will be advanced by affording more protection to the borrowers, and equalizing the benefits more justly between borrowers societies and directors in the exercise of their powers for the protection of individual members.

The presidents of twenty-seven principal New York banks met on Saturday, we are told, and "adopted resolutions declaring the need of action to protect financial interests on account of expected silver legislation." Perhaps it would be just as well for the success of the objects they have in view if these banking gentlemen didn't step quite so prominently to the front. There is a good deal of jealousy throughout the country just now, and particularly in the western and southern sections, in regard to the domination of New York capitalists and the banks and bankers of the country in the financial policy of the nation, and there is danger that their action may result in bringing about the very thing they are trying to prevent. Plenty of fellows in Congress and out of it only want to know what kind of legislation the banking interests want, in order to be satisfied that that is just about the worst thing that could happen to the country at the present time. The able financiers will therefore go slow if they are wise in their own generation.

The evidence of Colonel Shafter, one of our authorized "raiders" into Mexico, before the sub-committee of the military affairs committee, will not give much comfort to the newspaper closet-warriors who pine for Mexican gore. His testimony that the number of raids had been considerably decreased within the last two years: that the raiders were in most cases marauding bands of Indians; that he knew of no case where the Mexicans had refused to give up on application property thus stolen by Indians; that the Mexican troops expressed a strong desire to put a stop to disturbances; that their numbers had been increased for this purpose; that in his expeditions into Mexico he had invariably been treated with great cordiality by the Mexican officers, and by the respectable citizens of the frontier towns, and that the Mexican troops, besides endeavoring unassisted to prevent raids had co-operated with him for the same purpose, will come like a wet blanket over the military ardor of some of our patriots. The probability of a war with our southern neighbor grows fainter and fainter. Instead of finding in Mexico graves for our soldiers, and an opportunity to sink several million dollars, we must make her a great market for our products, as her situation and requirements indicate she should be. The reciprocal advantages of trade, while developing the resources of Mexico, will prove to our treasury a source of ever increasing wealth, and by proper use of our opportunities Mexico may help us to banish the next crisis far into the indefinite future.

So much has been said against Mark Twain's speech at the Whittier birth-day banquet, lately held in Boston, that he has concluded to purchase and edit a paper of his own, in which he can defend and explain his jokes at length. The arrangement will doubtless answer the purpose in view, but Mr. Clemens will be apt to find before he gets through with it that it is more profitable to furnish fun for somebody else's paper than it is to run one of his own.

The report that Lord Carnarvon has resigned his position in the British ministry shows what a height the Turco-Russian war in England has reached, and, if true, indicates that the Anglo-Turks are the masters of the situation. CARRIAGES AND SLEIGHS.
